MEMORANDUM DECISION AND ORDER
GRANTING MOTION FOR RULE 2004 EXAMINATION

The debtor scheduled NorSouth Construction Company of Georgia, Inc., as a creditor but now says she mistakenly scheduled that entity as a creditor. NorSouth holds a judgment against the debtor's company, Shelton Federal Group, LLC. If that company transferred assets to the debtor in a fraudulent conveyance, NorSouth might have a claim against the debtor. The debtor objects to an examination on the basis that it will be an attempt to identify assets of Shelton Federal Group, LLC, from which NorSouth can collect the judgment against that entity. I overrule that objection:

- NorSouth does not believe that it is a creditor of the debtor, but it is entitled to ascertain whether transactions between the debtor and Shelton Federal Group, LLC, have given rise to a claim against the bankruptcy estate of the debtor or whether there is any other reason why it may have a claim against the estate.

- If (and only if) the examination reveals that the debtor owes NorSouth a debt, NorSouth shall be entitled to further examine the debtor regarding the dischargeable or nondischargeable character of the debt and any other matters relating to the debtor's entitlement to a discharge, the bankruptcy estate, and the administration of the bankruptcy case.¹

If the examination strays beyond these permitted purposes, the debtor may object to the offending questions and seek a protective order.

The motion asks the court to order the debtor "to produce the documents and things described in Rule 2004 for inspection and/or copying" but the motion fails to list any documents or things that NorSouth seeks to examine. NorSouth will be permitted to subpoena materials, but the debtor will be entitled to raise timely objections to the production of the same.
